When Girls Hurt Girls Parent Pack Wins The National Parenting Center's Seal of Approval

A Way Through, LLC, is proud to announce that the When Girls Hurt Girls® Parent Pack has been awarded The National Parenting Center's (TNPC) 2011 Seal of Approval. TNPC conducts an independent testing procedure to judge a variety of products introduced and marketed to the parent/child consumer market. A Way Through submitted a parent guide and girl guide from the When Girls Hurt Girls® curriculum/product line.

The review from The National Parenting Center stated, "This program empowers girls with realistic responses that are appropriate and effective. There are two wonderfully written guides that are filled with great ideas and examples."

"It's always an honor to receive positive feedback about our efforts to be part of the solution in empowering girls to deal with relational aggression and bullying," said Blair Wagner, co-founder of A Way Through, LLC. "We take every bullycide and bullying incident to heart. We are firm in our belief that anti-bullying campaigns are not the solution. The most effective strategies offer a balanced combination of practical and compassionate actions."

"We are passionate about the importance of starting at the foundation of girlhood, so girls can learn early on how to positively assert themselves and thrive in friendships that feel good," said Jane Balvanz, elementary school counselor and co-founder of A Way Through, LLC. "To be recognized in support of this work is thrilling!"

A Way Through introduced the When Girls Hurt Girls® Parent Packs for Kindergarten through Grade 2 with a teleclass in November. Parents and educators can download the audio and transcript files for $5 or find out more about future teleclasses at <http://www.awaythrough.com/teleclass>.
